

Constitutional Institutionalization of Public University in Latin America

Jorge Olvera García¹
Omar Salvador Olvera Herreros²

Abstract:

The public university has taken a decisive importance for human development, not only as a personal level but in economic, cultural and moral terms. Its importance lies primarily in scientific research socially responsible. Under this scheme, it is necessary to redefine the role of public universities in reference to the relationship with the government and the possibility to participate in the conformation of the state organizations. In this context, we developed a Comparative Constitutional Study that allowed us, primarily, to establish the degree of participation, and secondly, to know what were the terms of the institutionalization of these Latin American public universities.

Key Words: Constitutional institutionalization, Public University, Public administration, government, democracy.
